It was October 2010. Ramon was living in a small apartment with his beloved uncle, Adam—whom he respectfully called Mr. Adam.

"Can you stop using that object?" Mr. Adam said firmly.
"What object?" Ramon replied, confused.
"That thing. whatever it is. These objects are very manipulative," Uncle Adam said with concern.Ramon sighed lightly and said, "Dear Uncle, this object is called a mobile."
Adam walked closer to Ramon and said in a serious tone, "Listen, kid. If you don't go to sleep right now, I will take that thing away from you. And then you won't be able to communicate with your friends. Understood?"

Ramon replied, “You say these words every day.”

“Shut the f*ck up,” Adam snapped, a hint of anger showing on his face.

“Okay, okay. I understand,” Ramon said quietly.

He went to his bed and lay down to sleep.

Adam slowly walked out, gently closing the door to Ramon’s room. He paused for a moment and muttered to himself,
“I wonder what’s going on with him.”

The Next Day

Ramon walked to college with his cousin, Elizabeth—whom everyone called Eliza.

“I know you didn’t sleep well last night, right, Ramon?” Eliza asked, glancing at him.

Ramon shrugged. “Yeah. I was searching about something.”

“About what?”

“The Great Blast. at the park in our town,” Ramon said.

Eliza stopped for a second, surprised. “Seriously, Ramon? That happened 18 years ago.”

She looked at him more seriously and added, “My father said it was just a terrorist attack.”
storytelling flow and pacing

“I don’t believe in this shit,” Ramon said coldly.

Eliza frowned. “May I ask why?”

Ramon took a breath. “As far as I know, the people who live near the park say they hear screams. like a monster being tortured.”

Eliza rolled her eyes. “Yeah, and your fictional horror stories can go to hell.”

Ramon snapped, “Go to hell, you—”

“Hey!” Eliza cut him off sharply.

They walked in silence for a moment.

Eliza was the same age as Ramon. She was Uncle Adam’s daughter. Ramon, at just seventeen years old, often found himself caught between curiosity and confusion.

“We’re back!” Eliza called out as they entered the apartment.

“Good. The food isn’t ready yet. You two go freshen up,” Uncle Adam said from the kitchen.

Eliza hesitated, then said, “But today. we saw something.”

Adam paused. “What do you mean?”

“A red star. it was falling from the sky,” she said quietly.

Adam’s expression changed instantly. “Did you see only one?”

Ramon nodded. “Yeah. just one.”

Adam stood still for a moment, lost in thought.

“Go,” he said. “Freshen up first.”
